Suggested exhibition route

Memories section: Step inside a memory box to read the pieces of writing from one of our learning contributors. This portion of the exhibition will take place in a confined space which is optional to enter. The writing will also be printed on the outside of the memory boxes for those who don't wish to enter. There will also be sound playing aloud in this area, which is the writing from inside the boxes being read out.

Journey Home section: A space that has been created to look like a park. Here, audiences will be invited to shoot footballs into a goal or sit on park benches and listen to audio recordings of park bench improvisations through headphones, as well as dialogue from our learning contributor sessions. You can also build a tower representing an ideal man with jenga blocks labeled with attributes made up by our learning contributors when exploring the theme of positive masculinity.

Teenage Bedroom section: A space that has been decorated to look like a bedroom, where a TV will display videos of a movement workshop from one of our learning contributors. Posters on the wall will display drawings from illustration workshops between a learning contributor and guest artists. You will also get to listen to two songs created by two of our learning contributors. There will be music playing aloud in this section of the exhibition.

Corridor

The corridor allows you to move from one studio to the other. The walls will display images of the process of making the exhibition.

There will be music playing aloud in this section of the exhibition.

The Clare

In this space, there will be a large projection on one wall of a video from our learning contributors.

The first section of this room will have a corkboard wall with a timeline running along it, where audience members will be invited to add defining moments that shaped their lives.

Finally, there will be a feedback wall where audience members are asked to respond to the exhibition from various prompts and use bulldog clips to attach these to the wall.

There will be music and sound playing aloud in this section of the exhibition.
